

NIFTY ▾

Home » Entrepreneurship

Jan 11, 2019 11:16 AM IST | Entrepreneurship

This is the most optimistic time for women entrepreneurs in the history of our planet, says Silicon Valley angel investor

> Silicon Valley-based serial angel investor and philanthropist Asha Jadeja Motwani has an eye out for social enterprises, especially those headed by women.

> One of the reasons for her bias is that women face greater challenges both within the home and outside it.

TRENDING ON CNBC-TV18

Economy

Experts make sense of what the Rs 5 lakh exemption means for you, the taxpayer

Personal Finance

Tax exemption can help boost demand for first-time buyers for houses

Economy

Here's what FM Piyush Goyal is offering farmers

AEKTA KAPOOR

Share

When Asha Jadeja Motwani speaks, throngs of entrepreneurs gather around and listen. The US-based serial angel investor was in India recently to launch a one-of-a-kind think tank that will promote disruptive technology out of India. "The idea is to foster tighter bonds between Silicon Valley and India," says the venture capitalist, who admits she has a soft spot for women-led social enterprises.

One of the reasons for her bias is that women face greater challenges both within the home and outside it. "Of course, challenges are everywhere, not just for women," she tells us. "That said, 2018 has been a pivotal year for women. The #MeToo and #TimesUp campaigns have put the spotlight not just on sexual harassment at workplaces but also on how skewed the gender balance is in most industries. People have started becoming very conscious of the fact that in these big tech companies there are, like, three women in a whole department full of men."

LIVE TV

RECOMMENDED FOR YOU

Retail
India, France drive
Scotch whisky sales as Brexit looms

Economy

Industrial production grows at 2.4% in December

Economy
Retail inflation cools to 18-month low of 2.5% in January

Asha, who completed her Ph.D in political science from University of California at Berkeley after doing her Masters and undergraduate studies in urban planning and civil engineering from the University of Southern California, is “delighted” that the #MeToo movement has caught on in India, and that concrete action has been taken against sexual predators.

“Here, the level of sexual harassment is worse. So I’m glad women are speaking up. This movement is also opening the door to the fact that women should have equal access to jobs, they are equal citizens, and should have an equal voice at the workplace. This is the most optimistic time for women entrepreneurs in the history of our planet,” she affirms.

A celebrated entrepreneur, philanthropist and founder of ‘MakerFest’ in India, Brazil, Pakistan and Africa, Asha was also greatly exposed to Silicon Valley culture and mindset through her late husband Rajeev Motwani, who was a Stanford Professor, an internationally acclaimed computer scientist, theoretician and angel investor. He was the architect of Google's algorithmic architecture that powers the world’s leading search engine today. He also mentored Larry Page and Sergey Brin, the co-founders of Google Inc, in 1998 at Stanford University.

Following in his thought philosophy, Asha's new non-profit think tank, christened MITLI (Motwani Institute of Thought Leadership in Innovation), would facilitate exchanges in key academic fields such as computer science, material science, education, health-tech, policy design and political science to give wings to aspirations of emerging entrepreneurs. She also plans to recruit a regional board for the global fund in India, potentially teaming up with Indian universities, NGOs, think tanks, and government.

"MITLI will be a permanent organisation designed to more systematically address the challenges through our entrepreneurial empowerment programmes," Asha said during the Delhi launch packed by mediapersons and entrepreneurs.

"My vision is to catalyze innovation and entrepreneurship in India at the grassroots level. Student exchanges between Stanford and South Asia will fuel key new vectors in our own research and teaching agenda," said Asha, who has invested in more than a hundred Internet and high social impact startups in the Bay Area, Boston, New York, Africa and India, some of which have become public companies.

Asha has also launched the annual Rajeev Circle Fellowship, with the objective of developing a dynamic corridor of entrepreneurship, collaboration and community between Silicon Valley and South Asia. In particular, it helps Indian entrepreneurs connect with mentors and angel investors in Silicon Valley. "We had 60 Fellows this year, of which 40 are women," says Asha, as an example of affirmative action to increase women's participation in the world of tech.

She cites the example of Kalyani Khona, founder of INCLOV, a unique dating app for people with disabilities, who was a Rajeev Fellow and whose app has broken ground both in the world of dating and technology. Asha is also looking at mentoring another woman-led startup that works as a peer-to-peer support system for those with mental illness.

We need to have more conferences centred on women in tech, Asha goes on. "It will give more women confidence to come up. There are a few women here and there on certain forums, but the critical mass is missing. We need more badass women on stage," she says, with a straight face.

"When that happens, we will see a tipping point. When women are unafraid to voice their opinions and are unafraid of being judged (and if you're judged, so be it, it doesn't matter), then we'll see true change"

Asha ends on an optimistic note: "These are good times for women. They must ride the change."

This article was first published in eShe magazine.

Published Date: Jan 11th, 2019 11:16 AM | Updated Date: Jan 11, 2019 11:16 AM IST

- Tags
- #MeToo movement
 - Asha Jadeja Motwani
 - challenges for businesswomen
 - India MeToo Movement
 - indian women entrepreneurs
 - unwind
 - woman entrepreneurs
 - woman entrepreneurs india
 - women entrepreneurs

Have you signed up for Primo, our daily newsletter?

It has all the stories and data on the market, business, economy and tech that you need to know.

To keep watching
CNBC-TV18,
India's No. 1
English Business
News Channel, call your Cable or DTH Operator
and subscribe now for just

Rs. 4 per month. You can also subscribe to CNBC-TV18 Prime HD for Re 1/- per month. Find out more

You May Also Like

India will not miss 5G opportunity; economic impact seen at over $1 trillion: Manoj Sinha | Sun Pharma beat profit of Rs 1,241

About Contact Advertise with Us Terms of Use Privacy Policy Disclaimer Apps Budget 2019

Data is a real-time snapshot

©TV18 Broadcast Limited. All rights reserved.

Network 18 Sites

NEWSLETTER

Email (Required)

The Most Vital Business And Financial News Delivered Straight To Your Inbox Privacy Policy